The Denver Museum of Nature & Science has completed the largest-ever fossil excavation project at Ziegler Reservoir near Snowmass Village. The site is a complex series of Ice Age ecosystems that has already yielded the largest collection of Mastodon bones from a single site anywhere. Initial radiocarbon dating indicates the site is more that 45,000 years old, and geologists estimate it could be as old as 130,000 to 150,000 years. It is likely it is the best high elevation Ice Age site anywhere in the world.

In total, 4,826 bones were pulled from the site in the spring/summer 2011. Twenty six vertebrate animals from the site have been identified, and the number of species will grow as work continues at the museum.

WHAT'S COMING

Appointed by Snowmass Village Town Council in early 2011, the Ice Discovery Committee (IADC) is a group of volunteers that are developing a business plan to share the story and science of this paleontological discovery and to find ways to benefit the Snowmass Village community. The "Tusk Force" has recommended that the discovery be put in the hand of a 501c3 non-profit corporation to fundraise and manage the project. This will ensure that the IADC's mission is fulfilled and the legacy of this discovery lives on in Snowmass Village for generations to come.
